APRIL SPEAKER—Peter Stubbs

Our speaker this month was Peter Stubbs, who gave an interesting talk, with a slide show, on “What are our tags telling us?” These are my notes on his talk.

The first man-made hybrid was in 1856.

Orchids can be divided into

Species—natural

Natural hybrids— a few are found in nature

Dendrobium [Den.] X delicatum

Dendrobium [ Den.] X gracillimum

Artificial hybrids—man made cultivation

Dendrobium Delicate Lustre

Or

Dendrobium Delicate Lustre ( Dendrobium Lustrous X

Dendrobium X delicatum )

Mericlones—laboratory made

{ can not be seedlings }

C. Royal Beau ‘Dendi’

Or

C. Royale Beau ‘Dendi’ FCC/NSW

*****

Mericlones often, but not always, will have Mc on the tag.

Seedlings’ tags can have pictures of the parent cross.

There are also intervarietal cross—Dendrobium to a speciosum.

Breeders give clonal names to identify that particular plant, from a flask, all have the same name but when they flower differently they are given a clonal name to separate siblings — C. Big Boy ‘Blue’ C. Big Boy ‘Red’

What/where to put your plant at benching? Try -

Orchid Wiz

<http://pps.rhs.org.uk/horticulturaldatabase/orchidregister/orchidregister.asp>

Ask a friend

My favourite—ask Tony Groube :)

I went online to look for more on the topic and found this, which helped me to understand this very difficult concept a little better [ I hope]. AM. :)

Species tags

Let's start out with a species name tag. Phal equestris

'Riverbend' AM/AOS. The Phal tells you that this is a Phalaenopsis; the equestris indicates the species; and

'Riverbend' is the clonal or specific name of this plant. A clonal name is normally given when a plant has been awarded.

The AM/AOS is a designation of award by the American Orchid Society. Awards are always designated at the end.

Hybrid tags

What you see on a tag for a hybrid Cattleya orchid will generally look something like this

Blc. Arthur Bossin 'Rapture' AM/AOS (Blc. Tampico x C. walkeriana).

The Blc. stands for Brassolaeliocattleya, an intergeneric hybrid between three different genera:

Brassavola now known as Rhynchoaelia + Laelia + Cattleya

These three genera are among the most common in Cattleya Alliance breeding.

Arthur Bossin is the name of the cross or grex between the parents of the hybrid. All the plants from the cross have this name. Due to genetics the progeny will not look at all alike, but they will all have the same name.

'Rapture' is the cultivar or clonal name of this particular plant, generally named after it has been awarded. This designation identifies the genetic makeup of this plant alone since others even in the same cross will not be identical. This part of the name is always enclosed in single quotes.

The information in parentheses if it is on the tag tells you the parents of the plant, in this case Blc. Tampico and C. walkeriana. The x is used to designate crossing of the parents, thus a seed cross. The C. is the designation used for Cattleya.

To recap, the first part of the name will tell you what type of hybrid the plant is, the second name will tell you what that particular cross is called and the third the specific name of the plant. Awards are designated at the end. Correctly labelled plants will have the parentage in parentheses.

The Australian Orchid Foundation

The A.O.F. is running an essay competition, with prize money.

The topic for 2019 is “ How do my orchids survive while I’m away from home?”

Deadline date is June 30th, 2019.

More information can be found at

Or see Anne-Marie at our next meeting. AM. :)
